Miss Logan played Lady Teazle to a crowded and delighted audience. The piece went off Joseph Surface, the smooth spoken hypocritical Othello, requires no mean abilities to show in its full force. As a foil to the character, there is another very difficult of execution. namely : Charles Surface, the brother of Joseph effort of Richard Brinsley Sheridan's genius, for by dint of his abilities, such a gloss is east would be inclined to excuse his, to use the mildest term, many faults.

Another character of importance in this brilliant comedy, is Sir Peter Teazle, the injured but forgiving husband, who can neither be ridiculed nor despised -so cunningly has the author drawn his character, that while inclined to laugh at him, we are obliged to respect his noble character. This was very well represented by Mr. Altemus. The remaining characters were all well performed, particularly Mr. Robinson's, as Crabtree; Mrs. Thayer, as Mrs. Candor; and Mr. Olwine, as Sir Benjamin Backbite; Miss Newton made a most charming Maria, and the fashionable Lady Sneerwell was well represented by Mrs. Altemus. Indeed, the whole corps dramatique acted very well and were highly applauded.

FINE ARTS.-Among the works of art now on exhibition in the Kotundo of the Capitol. we noticed the other day a portrait of Paul Aikens, by an artist of the name of Alexander, which is a very creditable specimen of art. With regard to its fidelity as a portrait we cannot speak, having never seen the artist that it is intended to represent, but in other respects we can speak in terms of approbation, particularly of the chiaro oscuro of the picture, which reminds one of Rembrandt. We observe that in the place where the above portrait is exhibited, the frame for Powell's picture is ready for the canvass. We should wish to see suitable for doing so, instead of delaying the period when there will be no one to admire it.

The people have the power in their own hands to regulate all such matters; over the libertine, that the most rigid moralist and if, in this instance, they have failed to exereise it, they have no one to blame but themselves. We cannot believe that if they had spoken out upon the subject and declared to the Councils, their disapprobation to the measure, that they (the Councils) would have persisted in its consummation, when there certainly is a much fairer and better method by which the necessary increase of revenue migh be obtained, viz., a new general assessment of all the property in our corporation, at its present increased valuation, and a tax upon all stocks which earn their profits in our town.

So far as we are concerned, personally, we care but little about the matter, but knowing as we do, that the heaviest end of the burden will ultimately fall on those who are least able to bear it, (in the shape of increased houserents,) we had hoped that our corporation legislators would have resorted to some other measure to raise the means to meet the interest upon our corporation subscription to the Metropolitan railroad, without imposing such a heavy burden, as this will in the end prove to be, upon a large number of our people, who are illy able to bear it.

Notwithstanding the excitement at the State House, the Governor's house was not without its throng of friends. Indeed, I think the patriets who wished to "do the State some service," from the office of a "notary public" down to a gentleman "turnkey" at the penitentiary, looked at each other with more fierceness than the Maineacs did at the Cogniacs. That there was considerable more spirit in their "mien and manner," could easily be seen by even "Old Blind Johnny" himself.
